

Fall

Brian Allan Skinner

Sparrows and angels
fall from the sky, abandoned by the air unseen,

not plummeting like
ripe fruit, but pirouetting, whirling to the ground

among maple leaves
and samaras, the secrets darkness keeps till spring.